DOUDNA CHOSEN SECRETARY BY STATE TEACHERS

LOCAL SUPERINTENDENT MAY RESIGN POSITION HERE TO TAKE UP WORK WITH WISCONSIN ASSOCIATION

City Superintendent E. G. Doudna, following one of the stormiest sessions in the history of the Wisconsin Teachers' association, was elected paid secretary of the association late yesterday afternoon by a vote of 150 to 25 for his closest opponent, L. S. Keeley. If Mr. Doudna accepts he will become the first paid secretary of the association.

Efforts to get in touch with Mr. Doudna at Milwaukee this morning failed, and it is not known whether he is planning to accept the offer. Acceptance, it seems certain, will mean the termination of his activities as Superintendent of Schools in Wisconsin Rapids, which position he has held since 1913. Early reports indicated that it was the purpose of the association to choose a paid secretary at a salary of from $5,000 to $7,500 to devote his full timeto the work of the organization. Unless this plan has been altered, acceptance of the new position would make it impossible for Mr. Doudna to carry on his work here.

Opposed Milwaukee Teachers

Mr. Doudna's election to the secretaryship is regarded as marking the triumph of the association forces opposed to the Milwaukee Teachers' association and its attempts to gain domination of the state association through limiting the representation at the convention accorded to all but the larger communities of the state. As president of the State Superintendents' association Mr. Doudna was one of the leaders in the fight to secure proper representation for all sections of the state and opposed Miss Ethel Gardner and her League of Classroom Teachers, composed of Milwaukee teachers who desired to keep control of the convention by allowing delegates to no communities which had less than fifty members of the association.

Miss Gardner who led the fight on the convention floor asserted that inasmuch as Milwaukee teachers were only allolved one delegate for every fifty members of the association it was unfair to allow other towns with fewer than fifty teachers to send delegates. Such action would automatically bar from convention representation teachers in all but the larger cities throughout the state and delegates from cities having less than fifty teachers protested vigorously. By vote of the convention delegates from cities having a major fraction of fifty teachers, that is, twenty-six or more, were seated.

May Meet Elsewhere

The Milwaukee teachers protested this action as unfair and discriminatory, and threatened to withdraw from the state association and form a separate organization of their own. They refused to participate in the election of officers in which Frank Hyer of Whitewater Normal was named president. As a result it is thought likely that when the convention selects its meeting place for next year at the closing session this afternoon it may be decided to hold it elsewhere than in Milwaukee.

Doudna Makes Reply

Mr. Doudna replied to the charges of discrimination brought by the Milwaukee teachers and asserted that the seating of delegates from the smaller cities of the state was entirely in accordance with the constitution of the association.

"For the last three years the representative plan of government of the state teachers' association has been thoroughly debated," Mr. Doudna said. "A year ago the present constitution was adopted unanimously after a committee of which Miss Gardner was a member had approved of it.

"It was thoroughly understood then that a 'major fraction' of 50 teachers could organize a local if 50 in the county or city were not members of the association. To make it perfectly fair to cities having only 30 or 40 teachers, the executive committee gave the same interpretation to this clause and it was circulated throughout the state.

"One superintendent asked me in September if I thought it was safe for his city to organize a local on this interpretation. I replied that there was no reason to doubt the fairness of the officers of the association and that I did not believe Miss Gardner's organization would play unfairly. I seem to have been mistaken in the last fact

May Resign

E. G. Doudna, who may resign the superintendency of the Wisconsin Rapids schools to accept the newly created position of paid secretary of the Wisconsin Teachers' association.

BONUS BILL VETO AND KU KLUX ARE HIT BY F. R. DUFFY

STATE LEGION COMMANDER GIVES SPLENDID PATRIOTIC ADDRESS; LARGE CROWD ATTEND ARMISTICE SERVICES.

State Legion Comamnder F. Ryan Duffy, Fond du Lac, declared that the bill which President Harding vetoed, popularly known as the bonus bill, was not a bonus bill but a bill for adjusted compensation, in his talk before the members of the American Legion and a large audience at the Armistice Day services this afternoon. "They called it a bonus bill, a bonus is a gift, but the American Legion denies that they sponsored any gifts from the Government. All we asked was adjusted compensation. We cannot pay for patriotism, but we do not intend to see an American soldier penalized in an economic or financial way because he served his country in times of war. when the government can see its way clear to pay the munitions manufacturers and war profiteers three billion dollars as adjusted compensation when their industries were converted from a peace time basis to a war time basis and when the railroads and the swivel chair clerks in Washington were paid hundreds of millions of dollars," was the straightforward manner in which Commander Duffy defined the situation.

Hits Ku Klux

Dr. Duffy denied that he has any selfish interest in the adjusted compensation legislation saying that he could not get one cent if it were passed and signed by the president. He said there were a few men who did not need the compensation but there were four million men who were in need of that compensation. He praised Wisconsin for giving a bonus, which he said was the state's best effort to repay in a small way by a small gift that which the men deserved.

ANNOUNCE MERGER OF G. R. FOUNDRY WITH CARBONIC CO.

LOCAL INDUSTRY ENLARGING PLANT TO CARE FOR INCREASED BUSINESS; BECOMES STRONG INSTITUTION

Announcements were made public at the offices of the American Carbonic Machinery Co. this morning by O. R. Roenius, sec'y and manager, that the Grand Rapids Foundry Co. had been merged with the Carbonic Co. and would henceforth be known as the American Carbonic Machinery Co. The company is now engaged in the construction of a new fireproof steel and concrete building which will be especially used in the manufacture of the coils and tanks for the refrigeration systems, which the company manufacturers. The company has also launched an issue of $50,000 perferred stock to be sold locally.

History of Company

Back in 1896 E. Roenius who is still a resident of Wisconsin Rapids, came to what was then Grand Rapids and purchased the old King Bros. Foundry and founded the Grand Rapids Foundry Company. The first year of operation they conducted what might be called an ordinary home-built, home-equipped crude foundry and machine shop employing but two men, and doing a general repair and custom business. Mr. Roenius was neither a foundryman nor a machinist. He had up to that time considerable mill wright and general operating mechanical experience. He liked mechanics and he desired to establish himself in business here; therefore purchased this shop. Through patience, hard work and good service rendered to the customers he gradually increased the business.

His eldest son, O. R. Roenius, after graduating from the Howe High school in the class of '98, immediately joined with his father in the conducting of this business. He has been actively connected with the organization since that time, and is at present secretary and manager of same.

Later, after finishing High school, the other son, F. A. Roenius, also entered into this business. About the same time O. E. Uehling, then a resident of Watertown, came to this city, purchased an interest in the Foundry Company, and has been since actively connected with same.

Moved in 1905

Up to the year 1905 the business was carried on at the old wooden constructed building which was then located on an island which now forms the northwest corner of the Municipal Swimming Pool just below the east wing of the Consolidated dam. That same year two new modern constructed buildings were put up on the present site of the company. These were one of the first reinforced buildings built in this vicinity. Even the roof slab and all the floors are reinforced concrete. Shortly after the completion of these buildings the company decided to add to their general foundry and machine shop repair buisiness the building of refrigerating machinery.

Good Engineering Dept.

In connection with the building of refrigerating machines one of the most important and very essential requirements of the business is a good engineering department. The company was very fortunate in securing the services of O. A. Labus, who joined the ranks in 1914. Mr. Labus is today considered one of the foremost refrigerating engineers in the business. He is chief engineer and designer and superintended some of the most important refrigerating plants installed and operating in this country.

About a year ago, George Buckley, another resident of this city, entered the services of the Sales Department, and has recently, together with his other brothers, become financially interested in the organization.

Officers and Directors

The officers and directors are E. Roenius, O. R. Roenius, F. A. Roenius Mrs. O. R. Roenius, O. E. Uehling, O. A. Labus, and George Buckley, all residents of Wisconsin Rapids and personally known to practically all residents here. They are a combination of practical, experienced and technical men, which coupled with the reputation that their product has already earned, and their progressive, optomistic, wide awake aggressive policy of doing things, should mean backing and help of the community.

a continued growth for the business.

The New Building

At present a new fire-proof steel and concrete building is being erected for the specializing of all kinds of coils and tanks for refrigerating purposes. This building is modernly equipped with electrical welding devices, heating ovens, bending machines, etc. This building will be only partially completed this fall, and will be added on to at the first opportunity the weather permits in the spring. When completed will give the company five buildings.

A visit to their shop will soon convince the reader that this is indeed an up to date well equipped plant, which is entitled to the confidence,

Madison, Wis., Nov. 11—Football is the only thing that receives attention in this city today, as the ancient rivals, Wisconsin and Illinois prepare to battle on the gridiron.

Thousands of alumni have returned for the annual Homecoming celebration with the football game the center of attraction. They are finding the city decked in Wisconsin colors, the people taking a holiday with their one interest, the contest at Camp Randall.

At a mass meeting in the armory last night Coach John R. Richards told how Wisconsin was going to humble Illinois after its protest of a Badger player, while players assured the crowd that they were prepared to add another victory to the Wisconsin record.

This afternoon 27,000 persons will jam the Camp Randall stadium to witness the one big conference game of the year played on the local field. Thousands have been unable to obtain seats for the occasion due to the unprecedented demand from students and alumni.

Will Settle Grudge

Wisconsin has a grudge to settle with Illinois on the field and everyone is looking for a bitter contest this afternoon. The Badgers plan to spare no strength to impose a stinging defeat on the visitors who have laid themselves open to special attention from Wisconsin for their protest of one of its players.

Illinois says that its team will be weakened by the loss of backfield men injured in previous games, but Wisconsin is taking no chances on cutting down its plan of attack in the expectation that the invading eleven will be a weak opponent. Games in the past have been lost by Wisconsin through this mistake.

Illinois is not confident that its team can stand against the onslaughter of the Badgers and the Homecomers are confident that they will see again the Wisconsin team victorious in its home game.

Charge Taxi Drivers With Supplying Booze To Boys

FORD AND WALTER SLUSSER ARRESTED FOLLOWING ALLEGED SALES OF MOONSHINE TO STUDENTS

Investigtions which resulted in the arrest today of Ford and Walter Slusser, taxi-cab drivers, are believed by Chief of Police R. S. Payne to have uncovered the source of the moonshine whiskey which local high school boys are known to have been obtaining during the last few months.

The Slusser brothers, arrested on evidence gathered by th local police, were arraigned before Judge W. H. Getts this morning where, after protesting their innocence of the charges brought against them, they waived examination and were bound over to the Circuit Court for trial. Charges of violating the prohibition enforcement laws were brought against both men.

Supplied School Boys

The arrests today were the direct result of the picking up of four boys ranging in age from fifteen to nineteen, by officer Louis Panter, who found them in a nintoxicated condition on the down town streets last Saturday night. Questioned by Chief of Police Payne the boys told of obtaining the liquor from the Slusser brother who they said procured it for them from outlying roadhouses after they had supplied the money to pay for it and for the taxi trip out and back.

The names of the boys involved in the affair, said to be students at the Lincoln high school, were not divulged by the police, and probably will not be unless they are called upon to testify at the Slusser trial. From the story which they told, and from other information gathered by the police, it is known that they procured liquor in a similar way on other occasions, and that other boys had also been supplied.

QUIET REVERENCE MARKS ARMISTICE DAY CEREMONIES

(By Associated Press)

Washington, Nov. 11—America's tribute to its unknown soldier was paid through President Harding today, with a simplicity that was a contrast over the elaborate ceremonies that marked his home coming last year.

Today there was no spoken word to mark the ceremony at the large marble stone in the Arlington Memorial Amphitheater where the unknown soldier keeps vigil.

There was a stilled sounding of trumpets as the president came to place a wreath on the soldier's tomb and he was gone again before the few hundred who waited realized that the ceremony had begun.

Whole Empire Silent

London, Nov. 11—Business activities in the empire stopped at eleven o'clock this morning as a tribute to the memory of its fighters, and for two minutes everything and everyone in the nation was still.

There were no elaborate ceremonies to mark the silent event at Cenotaph in Whitehall, the heart of the empire, where the king, representing the government, laid a wreath on the grave of the silent son of Britian.

Ministries of the army, navy and dominions paid the same tribute, and then the people coming on long pilgrimages to Whitehall, placed their offerings about the grave.

QUIET REVERENCE MARKS ARMISTICE DAY CEREMONIES

(By Associated Press)

Washington, Nov. 11—America's tribute to its unknown soldier was paid through President Harding today, with a simplicity that was a contrast over the elaborate ceremonies that marked his home coming last year.

Today there was no spoken word to mark the ceremony at the large marble stone in the Arlington Memorial Amphitheater where the unknown soldier keeps vigil.

There was a stilled sounding of trumpets as the president came to place a wreath on the soldier's tomb and he was gone again before the few hundred who waited realized that the ceremony had begun.

Whole Empire Silent

London, Nov. 11—Business activities in the empire stopped at eleven o'clock this morning as a tribute to the memory of its fighters, and for two minutes everything and everyone in the nation was still.

There were no elaborate ceremonies to mark the silent event at Cenotaph in Whitehall, the heart of the empire; where the king, representing the government, laid a wreath on the grave of the silnt son of Britian.

Ministries of the army, navy and dominions paid the same tribute, and then the people coming on long pilgrimages to Whitehall, placed their offerings about the grave.

"11-11-11"

On this Armistice Day, Nov. 11, the war has been over for four years. It is almost startling, that so much has elapsed since the German surrender, 11th hour of the 11th day of the 11th month.

Time, which heals all wounds and rushing the grear conflict into the midsts om memory.

The world still ferments with troubles, but the outlook as a whole is far better than it was a year ago. There are fewer uncertainties in the situation, and it is becoming obvious that the world is definitely on the way back to the normal conditions of peace. The road, however, will be a long one.

Crisis which threaten to become calamities, still rear their ugly heads periodically. Put people are noticing that these crisis never turn out as badly as expected; the clouds are more terrifying than the storms that follow.

America is leading all other countries in reconstruction and a return to sane thinking—common sense. We have taken and withstood the shock of industrial depression, natural reaction of the war. Our outlook is bright, where a year ago it was uncertain.

Europe will be slower to recover, for its damage was greater. But conditions over there, while bad, are far better than even the most optimistic hoped for when the last shot was fired in France.

Convalescence from a critical illness requires time, cannot take place quickly by magic. That is the keynote of the European situation, this Armistice Day.

Cease Firing!

This is a photographic reproduction of the "cease firing" order issued by American general headquarters to the United States troops at the fighting front in France—an armistice had been signed in the World War.

The order, as will be seen, was addressed to the First, Third and Fifth United States army corps and to the Second Colonials of France.

From the copy reproduced, the address to the First and Fifth corps and to the Colonials was erased, for relay of the order to the Third corps.

The relayed telegram containing the order to cease firing on the stroke of 11 on the historic Nov. 11, 1918, was brought back to the United States by William Morey, a telegraph operator at first attached to Company B, 319th Field Signal Battalion, which became the First Signal Corps on arriving in France, and later transferred to Company C.

After returning to this country Morey resumed his old position with the Western Union Telegraph Company, in Dayton, O. He died a year ago and the cease firing order and other messages of historic value were found among his effects.

un-American factions, the propagandists and others in their attempts to get the various hatreds aroused in people to cause a breach in the united spirit of the people of the United States. The Ku Klux Klan was cited by the speaker as an organization "masquerading under masks like thugs who call themselves an invisible empire to take laws in their own hands and to set up race hatred, religious hatred and to bring about a breach in the United States." He declared that the millions of dollars spent by the Bolshevists in this county would never penetrate the good people of the United States if they remained united and if they honored one another. He declared that the American Legion was opposed to any un-American organization which would break into the peace and harmony and the rights of the citizens of this country.

Was Good Talk

Mr. Duffy spoke at length upon the purposes of the Legion and the service which it was concentrating its efforts with to make the way easier for the men who were wounded in the war. He denounced President Harding and Dr. Sawyer for the manner in which the disabled ex-service men were being cared for.

Post Commander H. W. Goggins presided at the program and said that the day was set aside and the program arranged to stimulate and create a reverence for the ssignificant day—Nov. 11—Armistice Day.

Mayor O. R. Roenius welcomed Mr. Duffy and thanked the citizens for the large turnout at the program and said it was a testimonial of the fine patriotic spirit of the city of Wisconsin Rapids. Miss Jerome of the Stevens Point Conservatory of Music sang three excellent vocal selections. She was accompanied by Miss Heinz. The city band donated their services for the parade and gave an excellent patriotic medley before the speaking program. The service band of Port Edwards and Nekoosa assisted in the program marching in the parade and played two marches enroute. The Amusement Hall was donated by the owners and the Daly Music Co. donated the use of a new piano.

THEATRES

THE GREATEST FIGHT IN FILMS

That is what the producers claim for the big fight scene in "The Better Man Wins," a thrilling five-reel semi-western drama featuring Mr. Pete Morrison, which comes to the Ideal Theatre, tonight.

The fight scene takes place at the big Metropolitan Cabaret during the midnight supper show, when the big chorus number in full swing, and the place packed with guests. Mr. Morrison, the star, rides his world-famous horse, "Brownie," right into the midst of the proceedings, in an effort to take away his little country sweet heart, who has been lured to the city by the villain.

The fight that follows is said to be one of the greatest that has ever been photographed, and is conceded, even by rival producers, to be one of the most expensive fight scene ever made, for the place is literally wrecked be- the star leaps out the window with the leading lady, Miss Dorothy Woods, in his arms.

The fight scene required the services of over twenty-five acrobats, who took the abuse and were knocked backwards over balustrades off balconies into the hugh tank, and out the window into the street. Several were injured, but after the scene was over medical attention brought them back to consciousness, and they all agreed that it was the greatest stage battle of their careers.

Jack Holt, virile Paramount star, has been seen in many unique roles during his screen career, but none has equalled in general interest his impersonation of Robert Kendall, a pearl fisher in the South Pacific islands, in his latest Paramount picture, "The Man Unconquerable," which, according to Manager Gruwell of the Ideal, is one of the strongest photoplays he has booked thus far this season.

The scenes of the new picture founded on a story by Hamilton Smith, are laid in the pearling grounds of the South Sea Islands, where authorities conspire with thieves and the only law is the law of might. This condition provides ample opportunities for a story chock full of tense situations, and two fisted, red-blooded action.

There is a fighting Swede character, played by Clarence Burton who engages in several pugilistic encounters with Mr. Holt, the star. Rita Durand, a French girl played by Sylvia Breamer, whose father owns a pearl island concession, supplies the love interest.

A magnificent pearl which is stolen, causing the murder of its owner, and which is later recovered, figures in the story. There are many colorful scenes along the coast and in the interior of the island, striking scenes aboard pearling schooners; in the native quarters, and the like Edwin Stevens, Ann Schaefer, Jean De Briac, Williard Louis and others are in the cast. The picture, which comes to the Ideal theatre Sunday was made under the direction of Joseph Henabery.

PALACE TONIGHT

Rodolph Valentino Started as a Dancer

Theatregoers who have made a favorite of Rodolph Valentino, the handsome young Italian screen actor who has played with Dorothy Gish, Clara Kimball Young, Dorothy Phillips and is now appearing at the Palace Theatre in support of Mae Murray in "The Delicious Little Devil," have probably recognized this dark-eyed young man as the popular dancer who formerly acted as partner for the graceful Jean Sawyer, As Miss Sawyer's team-mate Mr. Valentino became a social favorite through the east, appearing in the New York theaters and dancing palaces, and also on a tour of the Keith and Orpheum circuits.

After appearing as a dancer for three years Mr. Valentino became associated with the musical stock company at the Alcazar Theatre, San Francisco, from which he graduated to the shadow stage.

This pleasing young actor is a thorough sportsman. He is a member of the Pasadena Polo Club, drives a fast motor car and is an enthusiastic aviator. In 1912 he ran second, in a 120-horsepower Fiat, in the race between Naples and Rome, and he spent eight months at Mineola Field, Long Island, conducting aerial experiments for the Italian army.

Palace Sunday and Monday—Two Hours of Laughter

A film version of Mark Twain's famous novel, "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court," showing for the first time at the Palace theater Sunday.

It is a delightful nonsensical fantasy humorous to the last degree.

The principal character, played admirably by Harry Meyers, is a Yankee of to-day, Martin Cavendish, who, though engaged to a wealthy aristocrat, is in love with her secretary

While reading a copy of his book, he is attacked by a burglar, who strikes him down with a lance which he finds in the room. Cavendish, while falling strikes his head against the furniture, and imagines himself attacked and taken prisoner to the Court of King Arthur.

He is sentenced to death, but threatens to take away the sun, and as a solar eclipse happily occurs he is hailed as a great magician and appointed Prime Minister.

Later he gets into the power of the wicked Morgan Le Fay, and is again sentenced to death, but is rescued by Sir Lancelot on a fiery, black, snorting, Mex-Eagle-spirited Ford.

The firm is highly amusing, is very well acted, staged and produced.

LESSON 26

THE RADIO TELEGRAPH CODE

You have all heard messages going through the air, or at least you thought they were messages, in the radio telegraph code. No doubt you have often said to yourself, "I wonder what they are talking about, etc." It is very easy to learn the code, but not so easy to copy it when someone is sending fast. To prove that it is not hard just look around you at the thousands who can copy the code and compare them with yourself. They are no brighter than you, in fact, that is one thing where an education does not appear to help you to any great extent. I have known people with little or no education to become very good operators and other with a high school education to fall down. Being able to copy the code fast is a matter of practice. practice, practice. Reading books and other literature will not make your copy faster although they will teach you to memorize the code quicker. The code is something like shorthand, in that, after you learn the different characters. it is merely a matter of practice. It is not advisable to practice too long at one time. It is better to try for an hour and then do something else, then if you feel inclined to copy. try another session of it but if you keep at it continually, you will become weary and dots will sound like dashes and you will not be able to get much of it and then soon become discouraged.

To be able to copy the code enables you to keep in touch with what is going on in the amateur ranks, what is happening at sea between ships. You can pick up S O S signals and learn all the details before they are published in the papers, can listen to Government stations sending out their reports, stock reports and market quotations when sent in the code but best of all from the beginner's viewpoint is, that after you have learned to copy at the rate of ten words per minute you can procure a Government amateur's license and install a cheap transmitting set of your own and work with friends. This is especially good for those who live in another town or out on farms.

There are several ways to learn the code depending on whether there is one learning or several. Of course, the best way is to go to a school where it is taught but this is expensive. The way most beginners learn is by purchasing a buzzer, 2 dry cells, and a sending key. The key to practice with does not necessarily have to be expensive, the cheapest kind made will answer. The buzzer has two binding posts on it, one of these you connect to one of the binding posts on the key, the other to one f the battery terminals and then run a wire from the otherbattery terminal to the other side of the key. You are ready then to commence sending the code. If the key seems awkward, adjust the tension of the spring and also the width of the contacts on the key by the adjusting screw. Where there are two who want to learn and they live near one another, they can run one wire between their homes, having a buzzer and key in each home and connect them to the ground for a return circuit. A battery is required in each house and a switch to disconnect your buzzer when sending so that your dots and dashes will register in the other home.

Where several desire to learn the code an outfit can be rigged up as shown in illustration. This shows a high grade buzzer costing about $2.00 and known as a high frequency type. This has four places to which wires can be connected and should be hooked up as shown. Single type telephones should be used. These cost about $2.00 each and should be connected in parallel with the two remaining contacts on the buzzer after the buzzer has been made to operate. In this type of buzzer you can change the sound of the signal by adjusting the tension on the vibrator. It has a range from a squeaky sound to one resembling a 500 cycle note used by modern transmitting stations.

It is not advisable to learn the code in the old style dot and dash method but to use the up-to-date method taught in all radio schools which use the DIT DAW method. The dit stands for dot and daw for dash.

Pointers

It is foolish to waste your time and materials trying to make something that can be purchased ready made cheaply.

If you use a tuning coil with a slider on it and get poor results, the trouble may be in the contact between slider and the rod. All receiving connections must be good.

A transmitting tube makes a good amplifier but requires higher plate and filament voltages.

Portage County Names Democrat To Sheriff Job

Stevens Point, Wis., Nov. 10—Final returns from Portage county show John F. Kubisiak, Democrat, elected sheriff over D. H. Parks, Republican, by a majority of 344 votes. Republican candidates for all other offices were elected by majorities ranging from 1,312 for H. D. Boston reelected Coroner, to 2,387 for Miss Ruth McCallum, victorious candidate for county clerk and first woman to be elected to office in Portage county.

Interest in the election so far as local offices were concerned was centered in the race ofr sheriff, which from the opening of the campaign was generally regarded as the only one in which the Democrats had a fighting chance. Kubisiak, former sheriff and an energetic campaigner, lost the city of Stevens Point by about 300 votes, but overturned the customary heavy Republican majorities of the rural districts to a sufficient extent to be returned victor. His most notable victory was in the Republican stronghold of Buena Vista, which he carried 135 to 65.

Portage county voted overwhelming against the amendment to increase the legal bonding limit for municipalities, and defeated by a small margin the proposition to allow sheriffs to succeed themselves. The amendment to permit a jury verdict by a five-sixths vote was passed by 123 votes.

LESSON 26

THE RADIO TELEGRAPH CODE

You have all heard messages going through the air, or at least you thought they were messages, in the radio telegraph code. No doubt you have often said to yourself, "I wonder what they are talking about, etc." It is very easy to learn the code, but not so easy to copy it when someone is sending fast. To prove that it is not hard just look around you at the thousands who can copy the code and compare them with yourself. They are no brighter than you, in fact, that is one thing where an education does not appear to help you to any great extent. I have known people with little or no education to become very good operators and other with a high school education to fall down. Being able to copy the code fast is a matter of practice, practice, practice. Reading books and other literature will not make your copy faster although they will teach you to memorize the code quicker. The code is something like shorthand, in that, after you learn the different characters, it is merely a matter of practice. It is not advisable to practice too long at one time. It is better to try for an hour and then do something else, then if you feel inclined to copy, try another session of it but if you keep at it continually, you will become weary and dots will sound like dashes and you will not be able to get much of it and then soon become discouraged.

Elizabeth screamed at what she saw when she entered the room on the roof.

"43 Years Old And Head Over Heels In Love!"

". . . He showed her his spacious office, back of the little cabinet which was to be her room. It took her breath—its size, the silk and silver; not at all like any law office which she had ever imagined. She bubbled and twinkled over it, prowling around delightedly. And the view from the broad windows took her breath again.

"She and Harwood stood beside one of them looking out at the great view—roofs, roofs, roofs, of all sorts and at all heights, under a haze of smoke which seemed an emanation of enormous energy, millions of people toiling. He pointed out various recognizable objects. She stared her eyes full.

"Her eyes were full of the view as she presently turned to the handsome man beside her. Of course, he hadn't made that smoky immensity beyond the window. But he was one of those who had made it and to whose will it answered—one of the masters of these cluttered, piled up kingdoms of the earth!

"She was not likely to withhold her admiration. Her shining eyes, full of the great view, did not withhold admiration now. With a sudden, heady leap of the blood Harwood felt that he could almost take her into his arms now—almost—almost!"

Her Highness Intervenes

CHAPTER I

Toward noon the wind changed, and about one o'clock it began to snow.

Eve, exhausted, lay on the sofa in her bedroom. Her step-father lay on a table in the dance hall below, covered by a sheet from his own bed. And beside him sat Trooper Stormont, waiting.

Eve, exhausted by shock and a sleepless night, was spared the more harrowing details of the coroners visit and the subsequent jaunty activities of Mr. Lyken and his efficient assistants.

She had managed to dress herself in a black wool gown, intending to watch by Mike, but Stormont's blunt authority prevailed and she lay down for an hour's rest.

The hour lengthened into many hours; the girl slept heavily on her sofa under blankets laid over her by Stormont.

All that dark, snowy day she slept, mercifully unconscious of the proceedings below.

In its own mysterious way the news penetrated the wilderness; and out of the desolation of forest and swamp and mountain drifted the people who somehow existed there—a few shy, half wild young girls, a dozen silent, lank men, two or three of Clinch's own people, who stood silently about in the falling snow and lent a hand whenever requested.

One long-shanked youth cut hemlock to line the grave; other erected a little fence of silver birch around it, making of the enclosure a "plot."

A gaunt old woman from God knows where aided Mr. Lyken at intervals; a pretty, a sulky-eyes girl with her slovenly, red-headed sister cooked for anybody who desired nourishment.

When Mike was ready to hold the inevitable reception everybody filed into the dance hall. Mr. Lyken was master of ceremonies; Trooper Stormont stood very tall and straight by the head of the casket.

Clinch wore a vague, indefinable smile and his best clothes—that same smile which had so troubled Jose Quintana.

Eve still slept. Descending again from his reconnaissance, Trooper Stormont encountered Trooper Lannis below.

"Has anybody picked up Quintana's tracks?" inquired the former.

"Not so far. An Inspector and two State Game Protectors are out beyond Owl Marsh. The Troopers from Five Lakes are on the job, and we have enforcement men along Drowned Valley from the Scaur to Harrod Place."

"Does Darragh know?"

"Yes. He's in there with Mike. He brought a lot of flowers from Harrod Place."

The two Troopers went into the dance hall where Darragh was arranging the flowers from his greenhouses.

Stormont said quietly: "All right, Jim, but Eve must not know that they came from Harrod's."

Darragh nodded: "How is she, Jack?"

"All in."

"Do you know the story?"

"Yes. Mike went into Drowned Valley early last evening after Quintana. He didn't come back. Before dawn this morning Eve located Quintana, set a bear-trap for him, and caught him with the goods—"

"What goods?" demanded Darragh sharply.

"Well, she got his pack and found Mike's watch and jewelry in it—"

"What jewelry?"

"The jewels Quintana was after. But that was after she'd arrived at the Dump, here, leaving Quintana to get free of the trap and beat it.

"That's how I met her—half crazed, going to find Quintana again. We'd found Mike in Drowned Valley and were bringing him out when I ran into Eve . . . I brought her back here and called Ghost Lake . . . They haven't picked up Quintana's tracks so far."

After a silence: "Too bad this snow came so late," remarked Trooper Lannis. "But we ought to get Quintana, anyway."

Darragh went over and looked silently at Mike Clinch.

"I like you," he said under his breath. "It wasn't your fault. And it wasn't mine, Mike . . . I'll try to square things. Don't worry."

He came back slowly to where Stormont was standing near the door:

"Jack," he said, "you can't marry Eve on a Trooper's pay. Why not quit and take over the Harrod estate? . . . You and I can go into business together later if you like."

After a pause: "That's rather wonderful of you, Jim," said Stormont, "but you don't know what sort of business man I'd make—"

"I know what sort of officer you made . . . I'm taking no chance. . . . And I'll make my peace with Eve—or somebody will do it for me . . . Is it settled then?"

"Thanks," said Trooper Stormont, reddening. They clasped hands. Then Stormont went about and lighted the candles in the room. Clinch's face, again revealed, was still faintly amused at something or other. The dead have much to be amused at.

As Darragh was about to go, Stormont said: "We're burying Clinch at eleven tomorrow morning. The Ghost Lake Pilot officiates."

"I'll come if it won't upset Eve," said Darragh.

"She won't notice anybody, I fancy," remarked Stormont.

He stood by the veranda and watched Darragh take the Long Trail through the snow. Finally the glimmer of his swinging lantern was lost in the woods and Stormont mounted the stairs once more, stood silently by Eve's open door, realized she was still heavily asleep, and seated himself on a chair outside her door to watch and wait.

All night long it snowed hard over the Star Pond country, and the late gray light of morning revealed a blinding storm pelting a white robed world.

Toward ten o'clock, Stormont, on guard, noticed that Eve was growing restless.

Downstairs the flotsam of the forest had gathered again: Mr. Lyken was there in black gloves; the Reverend Laomi Smatter had arrived in a sleigh from Ghost Lake. Both were breakfasting heavily.

The pretty, sulky-faced girl fetched a tray and placed Eve's breakfast on it; and Trooper Stormont carried it to her room.

She was awake when he entered. He set the tray on the table. She put both arms around his neck.

"Jack," she murmured, her eyes tremulous with tears.

"Everything has been done," he said "Will you be ready by eleven? I'll come for you."

She clung to him in silence for a while.

At eleven he knocked on her door. She opened it. She wore her black wool gown and a black fur turban. Some of her paller remained—traces of tears and bluish smears under both eyes. But her voice was steady.

"Could I see Dad a moment alone?"

"Of course."

She took his arm: they descended the stairs. There seemed to be many people about but she did not lift her eyes until her lover led her into the dance hall where Clinch lay smiling his mysterious smile.

Then Stormont left her alone there and closed the door.

In a terrific snow-storm they buried Mike Clinch on the spot he had selected, in order that he might keep a watchful eye upon the trespassing ghost of old man Harrod.

It blew and stormed and stormed, and the thin, nasal voice of "Rev. Smatter" was utterly lost in the wind. The slanting lances of snow drove down on the casket, building a white mound over the flowers, blotting the hemlock boughs from sight.

There was no time to be lost now; the ground was freezing under a veering and bitter wind out of the west. Mr. Lyken's talented assistants had some difficulty in shaping the mound which snow began to make into a white and flawless monument.

The last slap of the spade rang with a metallic jar across the lake, where snow already blotted the newly forming film of ice; the human denizens of the wilderness filtered back into it one by one; "Rev. Smatter" got into his sleigh, plainly concerned about the road; Mr. Lyken betrayed unprofessional haste in loading his wagon with his talented assistants and starring for Ghost Lake.

CHAPTER II

Darragh, in blanket outfit, a pair of snow-shoes on his back, a rifle in his mittened hand, came trudging up from the lake. He and Stormont watched Lannis riding away with the two horses.

"He'll make it all right, but it's time he started," said the latter.

Darragh nodded: "Some storm. Where is Eve?"

"In her room."

"What is she going to do, Jack?"

"Marry me as soon as possible She wants to stay here for a few days but I can't leave her here alone. I think I'll telephone to Ghost Lake for a sleigh."

"Let me talk to her," said Darragh in a low voice.

"Do you think you'd better—at such a time?"

"I think it's a good time. It will divert her mind, anyway. I want her to come to Harrod Place."

"She won't" said Stormont grimly.

"She might. Let me talk to her."

Stormont hesitated, looked at him, nodded. Darragh stood his rifle against the bench on the kitchen porch. They entered the house slowly. And met Eve descending the stairs.

The girl looked at Darragh, astonished, then her pale face flushed with anger.

"What are you doing in this house?" she demanded unsteadily. "Have you no decency, no shame?"

"Yes," he aid. "I am ashamed of what my kinsman has done to you and yours. That is partly why I am here."

"You came here as a spy," she said with hot contempt. "You lied your purpose. You came here to betray Dad! If he'd known it he would have killed you!"

Yes, he would have. But—do you know why I came here, Eve?"

"I've told you!"

"And you are wrong. I didn't come here to betray Mike Clinch: I came to save him."

"Do you suppose I believe a man who has lied to Dad?" she cried.

"I don't ask you to Eve. I shall let somebody else prove what I say I don't blame you for your attitude. God knows I don't blame Mike Clinch. He stood up like a man to Henry Harrod. . . . . All I ask is to undo some of the rotten things that my uncle did to you and yours. And that is partly why I came here."

The girl said passionately: "Neither Dad nor I want anything from Harrod Place or from you! Do you suppose you can come here after Dad is dead and pretend you want to make amends for what your uncle did us?"

"Eve," said Darragh gravely, "I've made some amends already. You don't know it, but I have. . . . . You may not believe it, but I liked your father. He was a real man. Had anybody done to me what Henry Harrod did to your father I'd have behaved as your father behaved; I'd never have budged from this spot; I'd have hunted where I hatred against Henry Harrod and Harrod Place, and every soul in it!"

The girl, silenced, looked at him without belief.

He said: "I am not surprised that you distrust what I say. But the man you are going to marry was a junior officer in my command. I have no closer friend than Jack Stormont. Ask him whether I am to be believed."

Astounded, the girl turned a flushed, incredulous face to Stormont.

He said: "You may trust Darragh as you trust me. I don't know what he has to say to you, dear. But whatever he says will be the truth."

Darragh said, gravely: "Through a misunderstanding your father came into possession of stolen property, Eve. He did not know it had been stolen. I did. But Mike Clinch would have believed me if I had told him that the case of jewels in his possession had been stolen from a woman. . . . Quintana stole them. By accident they came to your father's possession. I learned of this. I had promised this woman to recover her jewels.

"I came here for the purpose, Eve. And for two reasons: first because I learned that Quintana also was coming here to rob your father of these gems; second, because, when I knew your father, and knew you. I concluded that it would be an outrage to call on the police. It would mean prison for Clinch, misery and ruin for you, Eve. So—I tried to steal the jewels. . . . . to save you both."

He looked at Stormont, who seemed astonished.

"To whom do these jewels belong Jim?" demanded the Trooper.

"To the young Grand Duchess of Esthonia. . . . . Do you remember that I befriended her over there?"

"Yes."

"Do you remember that the Reds were accused of burning her chateau and looting it?"

"Yes, I remember,"

"Well, it was Quintana and his gang of international criminals who did that," said Darragh dryly.

And, to Eve: "By accident this case of jewels, emblazoned with the coat of arms of the Grand Duchess of Esthonia, came into your father's possession. That is the story, Eve."

There was a silence. The girl looked at Stormont, flushed painfully, looked at Darragh.

Then, without a word, she turned, ascended the stairs, and reappeared immediately carrying the leather case.

"Thank you, Mr. Darragh," she said simply: and laid the case in his hand.

"But," said Darragh, "I want you to do a little more. Eve. The owner of these gems is my guest at Harrod Place. I want you to go give them to her yourself.

"I—I can't go to Harrod Place," stammered the girl.

"Please don't visit the sins of Henry Harrod on me, Eve."

"I—don't. But—but that place—"

After a silence: "If Eve feels that way," began Stormont awkwardly, "I couldn't become associated with you in business, Jim—"

"I'd rather sell Harrod Place than lose you!" retorted Darragh almost sharply. "I want to go into business with you, Jack—if Eve will permit me—"

She stood looking at Stormont the heightened color playing in her cheeks as she began to comprehend the comradeship between these two men.

Slowly she turned to Darragh, offered her hand:

"I'll go to Harod Place," she said in a low voice.

Darragh's quick smile brightened the somber gravity of his face.

"Eve," he said, "when I came over here this morning from Harrod Place I was afraid you would refuse to listen to me; I was afraid you would not even see me. And so I brought with me—somebody—to whom I felt certain you would listen. . . . . I brought with me a young girl—a poor refugee from Russia, once wealthy, today almost penniless. . . . . Her name is Theodorica. . . . . Once she was Grand Duchess of Esthonia. . . . . But this morning a clergyman from Five Lakes changed her name. . . . . To such friends as you and Jack she is Ricca Darragh now. . . . . and she's having a wonderful time on her new snow-shoes—"

He took Eve by one hand and Stormont by the other, and drew them to the kitchen door and kicked it open.

Through the swirling snow, over on the lake-slope at the timber edge, a graceful, boyish figure in scarlet and white wool moved swiftly over the drifts with all the naive delight of a child with a brand new toy.

All aglow and a trifle breathless, she met Darragh just beyond the veranda, rested one mittened hand on his shoulder while he knelt and unbuckled her snow-shoes, stepped lightly from them and came forward to Eve with outstretched hand and a sudden winning gravity in her lovely face.

"We shall be friends, surely," she said in her quick, winning voice—"because my husband has told me—and I am so grieved for you—and I need a girl friend—"

Holding both Eve's hands, her mittens dangling from her wrist, she looked into her eyes very steadily.

Slowly Eve's eyes filled; more slowly Ricca kissed her on both cheeks, framed her face in both hands, kissed her lightly on the lips.

Then, still holding Eve's hands, she turned and looked at Stormont.

"I remember you now," she said. "You were with my husband in Riga."

She freed her right hand and held it out to Stormont. He had the grace to kiss it and did it very well for a Yankee.

Together they entered the kitchen door and turned into the dining room on the left, where were chairs around the plain pine table.

Darragh said: "The new mistress of Harrod Place has selected your quarters, Eve. They adjoin the quarters of her friend, the Countess Orloff-Strewitz."

"Valentine begged me," said Ricca, smiling. "She is going to be lonely without me. All hours of day and night we were trotting into one another's rooms—" She looked gravely at Eve: "You will like Valentine; and she will like you very much. . . . . As for me—I already love you."

She put one arm around Eve's shoulders: "How could you even think of remaining here all alone? Why, I should never close my eyes for thinking of you, dear."

Eve's head dropped; she said in a stifled voice: "I'll go with you . . . . . I want to. . . . . I'm very—tired."

"We had better go now," said Darragh. "Your things can be brought over later. If you'll dress for snow-shoeing, Jack can pack what clothes you need. . . . . Are there snow-shoes for him, too?"

Eve turned tragically to her lover: "In Dad's closet—" she said, choking; then turned and went up the stairs, still clinging to Ricca's hand and drawing her with her.

Smatter" got into his sleigh, plainly concerned about the road; Mr. Lyken betrayed unprofessional haste in loading his wagon with his talented assistants and starting for Ghost Lake.

CHAPTER II

Darragh, in blanket outfit, a pair of snow-shoes on his back, a rifle in his mittened hand, came trudging up from the lake. He and Stormont watched Lannis riding away with the two horses.

"He'll make it all right, but it's time he started," said the latter.

Darragh nodded: "Some storm. Where is Eve?"

"In her room."

"What is she going to do, Jack?"

"Marry me as soon as possible She wants to stay here for a few days but I can't leave her here alone. I think I'll telephone to Ghost Lake for a sleigh."

"Let me talk to her," said Darragh in a low voice.

"Do you think you'd better—at such a time?"

"I think it's a good time. It will divert her mind, anyway. I want her to come to Harrod Place."

"She won't" said Stormont grimly.

"She might. Let me talk to her."

Stormont hesitated, looked at him, nodded. Darragh stood his rifle against the bench on the kitchen porch. They entered the house slowly. And met Eve descending the stairs.

The girl looked at Darragh, astonished, then her pale face flushed with anger.

"What are you doing in this house?" she demanded unsteadily. "Have you no decency, no shame?"

"Yes," hes aid, "I am ashamed of what my kinsman has done to you and yours. That is partly why I am here."

"You came here as a spy," she said with hot contempt. "You lied your purpose. You came here to betray Dad! If he'd known it he would have killed you!"

"Yes, he would have. But—do you know why I came here, Eve?"

"I've told you!"

"And you are wrong. I didn't come here to betray Mike Clinch: I came to save him."

"Do you suppose I believe a man who has lied to Dad?" she cried.

"I don't ask you to Eve. I shall let somebody else prove what I say I don't blame you for your attitude. God knows I don't blame Mike Clinch. He stood up like a man to Henry Harrod. . . . . All I ask is to undo some of the rotten things that my uncle did to you and yours. And that is partly why I came here."

The girl said passionately: "Neither Dad nor I want anything from Harrod Place or from you! Do you suppose you can come here after Dad is dead and pretend you want to make amends for what your uncle did us?"

"Eve," said Darragh gravely, "I've made some amends already. You don't know it, but I have. . . . . You may not believe it, but I liked your father. He was a real man. Had anybody done to me what Henry Harrod did to your father I'd have behaved as your father behaved; I'd never have budged from this spot; I'd have hunted where I hatred against Henry Harrod and Harrod Place, and every soul in it!"

The girl, silenced, looked at him without belief.

He said: "I am not surprised that you distrust what I say. But the man you are going to marry was a junior officer in my command. I have no closer friend than Jack Stormont. Ask him whether I am to be believed."

Astounded, the girl turned a flushed, incredulous face to Stormont.

He said: "You may trust Darragh as you trust me. I don't know what he has to say to you, dear. But whatever he says will be the truth."

Darragh said, gravely: "Through a misunderstanding your father came into possession of stolen property, Eve. He did not know it had been stolen. I did. But Mike Clinch would have believed me if I had told him that the case of jewels in his possession had been stolen from a woman. . . . Quintana stole them. By accident they came to your father's possession. I learned of this. I had promised this woman to recover her jewels.

"I came here for the purpose, Eve. And for two reasons: first because I learned that Quintana also was coming here to rob your father of these gems; second, because, when I knew your father, and knew you, I concluded that it would be an outrage to call on the police. It would mean prison for Clinch, misery and ruin for you, Eve. So—I tried to steal the jewels. . . . . to save you both."

He looked at Stormont, who seemed astonished.

"To whom do these jewels belong Jim?" demanded the Trooper.

"To the young Grand Duchess of Esthonia. . . . . Do you remember that I befriended her over there?"

"Yes."

"Do you remember that the Reds were accused of burning her chateau and looting it?"

"Yes, I remember,"

"Well, it was Quintana and his gang of international criminals who did that," said Darragh dryly.

And, to Eve; "By accident this case of jewels, emblazoned with the coat of arms of the Grand Duchess of Esthonia, came into your father's possession. That is the story, Eve."

There was a silence. The girl looked at Stormont, flushed painfully, looked at Darragh.

Then, without a word, she turned, ascended the stairs, and reappeared immediately carrying the leather case.

"Thank you, Mr. Darragh," she said simply; and laid the case in his hand.

"But," said Darragh, "I want you to do a little more, Eve. The owner of these gems is my guest at Harrod Place. I want you to go give them to her yourself.

"I—I can't go to Harrod Place," stammered the girl.

"Please don't visit the sins of Henry Harrod on me, Eve."

"I—don't. But—but that place—"

After a silence: "If Eve feels that way," began Stormont awkwardly. "I couldn't become associated with you in business, Jim—"

"I'd rather sell Harrod Place than lose you!" retorted Darragh almost sharply. "I want to go into business with you, Jack—if Eve will permit me—"

She stood looking at Stormont the heightened color playing in her cheeks as she began to comprehend the comradeship between these two men.

Slowly she turned to Darragh, offered her hand:

"I'll go to Harod Place," she said in a low voice.

Darragh's quick smile brightened the somber gravity of his face.

"Eve," he said, "when I came over here this morning from Harrod Place I was afraid you would refuse to listen to me; I was afraid you would not even see me. And so I brought with me—somebody—to whom I felt certain you would listen.....I brought with me a young girl—a poor refugee from Russia, once wealthy, today almost penniless.....Her name is Theodorica.....Once she was Grand Duchess of Esthonia.....But this morning a clergyman from Five Lakes changed her name.....To such friends as you and Jack she is Ricca Darragh now.....and she's having a wonderful time on her new snow-shoes—"

He took Eve by one hand and Stormont by the other, and drew them to the kitchen door and kicked it open.

Through the swirling snow, over on the lake-slope at the timber edge, a graceful, boyish figure in scarlet and white wool moved swiftly over the drifts with all the naive delight of a child with a brand new toy.

All aglow and a trifle breathless, she met Darragh just beyond the veranda, rested one mittened hand on his shoulder while he knelt and unbuckled her snow-shoes, stepped lightly from them and came forward to Eve with outstretched hand and a sudden winning gravity in her lovely face.

"We shall be friends, surely," she said in her quick, winning voice—"because my husband has told me—and I am so grieved for you—and I need a girl friend—"

Holding both Eve's hands, her mittens dangling from her wrist, she looked into her eyes very steadily.

Slowly Eve's eyes filled; more slowly Ricca kissed her on both cheeks, framed her face in both hands, kissed her lightly on the lips.

Then, still holding Eve's hands, she turned and looked at Stormont.

"I remember you now," she said. "You were with my husband in Riga."

She freed her right hand and held it out to Stormont. He had the grace to kiss it and did it very well for a Yankee.

Together they entered the kitchen door and turned into the dining room on the left, where were chairs around the plain pine table.

Darragh said: "The new mistress of Harrod Place has selected your quarters, Eve. They adjoin the quarters of her friend, the Countess Orloff-Strewitz."

"Valentine begged me," said Ricca, smiling. 'She is going to be lonely without me. All hours of day and night we were trotting into one another's rooms—" She looked gravely at Eve: "You will like Valentine; and she will like you very much. . . . . As for me—I already love you."

She put one arm around Eve's shoulders: "How could you even think of remaining here all alone? Why, I should never close my eyes for thinking of you, dear."

Eve's head dropped; she said in a stifled voice; "I'll go with you .....I want to.....I'm very—tired."

"We had better go now," said Darragh. "Your things can be brought over later. If you'll dress for snow-shoeing, Jack can pack what clothes you need.....Are there snow-shoes for him, too?"

Eve turned tragically to her lover: "In Dad's closet—" she said, choking; then turned and went up the stairs, still clinging to Ricca's hand and drawing her with her.

The Nekoosa-Edwards Paper Company will refund the expense of the course to all employes completing it and is also taking care of the expense of engaging instructors. The classes are being held on the men's own time, however, so both employer and employe are contributing to the work.

Uncle Sam Finds Railroad Business Good In Alaska

Anchorage, Alaska—Uncle Sam is finding the railroad business good on his new Alaska line which runs from tidewater at Seward and Anchorage, across the mountains to Fairbanks and Nenana, on the territory's interior river system.

Traffic has been so heavy on the line that it has been necessary to add more Pullman sleeping coaches and baggage cars. At present the road is operating thirty passenger coaches, 716 freight cars and 236 cars of miscellaneous nature, making a total of 782 cars.

In addition to the railorad, the government, also is operating two river transports to connect the lower-river points with the road. These boats will connect with mosquito fleets operating on the smaller rivers of the interior and will serve to hook up the entire section in one great transportation system.

Coal is one of the big items on the freight bills on this transportation system. The coal is taken from the mines along the railroad and sent to all parts of the interior by rail and boat.

With a good supply of coal at reasonable prices it will be possible to mine large areas of frozen ground which, it is believed, contain gold-bearing gravels. Geological survey officials estimate there is $300,000,000 in gold in these gravels.

Nome, one of the distant points of Alaska, will benefit by getting coal at lower prices. At present coal is $45 a ton in Nome. By taking it down the river and across an arm of the Bering Sea to Nome it is thought coal can be sold there for half the price.

The only thing the bootlegger's public has not swallowed is Mr. Haynes' warning that 98 per cent of hootch is poison.

Couderay Farmers Wage War On Timber Wolves

(By Associated Press)

Couderay, Wis. Nov. 10.—Farmers in the Medeer settlement, ten miles southwest of here, have organized to launch war against timber wolves which they say are proving the greatest menace to sheep farms. There are large numbers of them in that vicinity. The animals are said to be exceedingly bold and go out in broad daylight and get sheep.

One farmer shot a wolf while it was tearing a lamb to pieces, after it had robbed the fold.

Waupaca County Elects Woman To State Assembly

(By Associated Press)

Clintonville, Wis., Nov. 10—Mrs. Lila Matteson was elected a member of the assembly from Waupaca county, according to returns completed today, and is the first woman to serve in the Wisconsin legislature.

Mrs. Matteson, Republican and anti-LaFollette candidate, defeated George Megg and Frank Timm for Republican nomination in the primary and had little opposition in the election Tuesday.

Wisconsin's first assembly woman is the mother of five children. Her husband, Noyes Matteson, is president of the American Society of Equity. She is a lecturer and organizer of the Women's Christian Temperance Union and is widely known in the state.

The assembly woman promises to help fight in the legislature for supervision of dance halls in rural districts and not regulation by ordinances.

Mrs. Matteson said she was not in favor of legislation seeking reforms in women's dress.

Law Forbids Bulls Freedom Of Highways Morgan Rules

Madison, Wis.—Wenever bulls are permitted to roam unrestricted by a fence, they are running at large and violating the statutes, Attorney General Morgan held. He advised O. D. Black, district attorney of Richland county, however, that farmers need not tie their animals to comply with the law.

Complaints by teachers and parents of school children frightened by bulls along the highway, brought the opinion from the attorney general holding that all animals must be kept fenced in.

"Where the only restraint upon the wonderings of the animal is his own disposition to travel, he is running at large in violation of the law," Mr. Morgan said.

Uncle Sam Finds Railroad Business Good In Alaska

Anchorage, Alaska—Uncle Sam is finding the railroad business good on his new Alaska line which runs from tidewater at Seward and Anchorage, across the mountains to Fairbanks and Nenana, on the territory's interior river system.

Traffic has been so heavy on the line that it has been necessary to add more Pullman sleeping coaches and baggage cars. At present the road is operating thirty passenger coaches, 716 freight cars and 236 cars of miscellaneous nature, making a total of 782 cars.

In addition to the railorad, the government, also is operating two river transports to connect the lower-river points with the road. These boats will connect with mosquito fleets operating on the smaller rivers of the interior and will serve to hook up the entire section in one great transportation system.

Coal is one of the big items on the freight bills on this transportation system. The coal is taken from the mines along the railroad and sent to all parts of the interior by rail and boat.

With a good supply of coal at reasonable prices it will be possible to mine large areas of frozen ground which, it is believed, contain gold-bearing gravels. Geological survey officials estimate there is $300,000,000 in gold in these gravels.

Nome, one of the distant points of Alaska, will benefit by getting coal at lower prices. At present coal is $45 a ton in Nome. By taking it down the river and across an arm of the Bering Sea to Nome it is thought coal can be sold there for half the price.

The only thing the bootlegger's public has not swallowed is Mr. Haynes' warning that 98 per cent of hootch is poison.

Couderay Farmers Wage War On Timber Wolves

(By Associated Press)

Couderay, Wis. Nov. 10.—Farmers in the Modeer settlement, ten miles southwest of here, have organized to launch war against timber wolves which they say are proving the greatest menace to sheep farms. There are large numbers of them in that vicinity. The animals are said to be exceedingly bold and go out in broad daylight and get sheep.

One farmer shot a wolf while it was tearing a lamb to pieces, after it had robbed the fold.

Waupaca County Elects Woman To State Assembly

(By Associated Press)

Clintonville, Wis., Nov. 10—Mrs. Lila Matteson was elected a member of the assembly from Waupaca county, according to returns completed today, and is the first woman to serve in the Wisconsin legislature.

Mrs. Matteson, Republican and anti-LaFollette candidate, defeated George Megg and Frank Timm for Republican nomination in the primary and had little opposition in the election Tuesday.

Wisconsin's first assembly woman is the mother of five children. Her husband, Noyes Matteson, is president of the American Society of Equity. She is a lecturer and organizer of the Women's Christian Temperance Union and is widely known in the state.

The assembly woman promises to help fight in the legislature for supervision of dance halls in rural districts and not regulation by ordinances.

Mrs. Matteson said she was not in favor of legislation seeking reforms in women's dress.

Law Forbids Bulls Freedom Of Highways Morgan Rules

Madison, Wis.—Wenever bulls are permitted to roam unrestricted by a fence, they are running at large and violating the statutes, Attorney General Morgan held. He advised O. D. Black, district attorney of Richland county, however, that farmers need not tie their animals to comply with the law.

Complaints by teachers and parents of school children frightened by bulls along the highway, brought the opinion from the attorney general holding that all animals must be kept fenced in.

"Where the only restraint upon the wonderings of the animal is his own disposition to travel, he is running at large in violation of the law," Mr. Morgan said.

Who's Who In Wisconsin Rapids

The Who's Who column will be run each Saturday in the Wisconsin Rapids Daily Tribune. It will include a brief sketch of the life of citizens who have helped make history for Wisconsin Rapids.

Clark Lyon

CLARK LYON

Among the earlier residents of Wisconsin Rapids is Clark Lyon, son of Reuben and Esther Jane Hill Lyon. His father came to the Wisconsin "Pineries" from Frankenville, N. Y. early in the year 1845 and his mother come west with her parents from Mansenville, Vermont, the year following.

Clark Lyon was born in South Centralia, December 11, 1853. His father at that time, in company with Ahira Sampson, another of the early lumbermen of the locality, owned and operated a saw mill.

Moved to Centralia

When Clark was three years old the family moved to Centralia, and two years later Clark attended his first term of school. His first teacher was Miss Frances Morrell, who later became the wife of John Edwards one of the leaders in the Wisconsin lumber industry of half a century or more ago. Solicitous for the rapid progress of his son, the elder Lyon told the young teacher that he would pay her $10 in addition to the regular scholarship fee if she would teach Clark the alphabet within one month's time. Whether she was spurred on by the additional reward, or met success because of the pupil's ability to learn rapidly is not recorded, but at all events Miss Morrell claimed the $10 after the expiration of the month.

Clark's next teacher, Henry Tyler taught in the little school house located on what is now the west side market square. Mr. Tyler was fond of playing ball and often during recess would engage in a game with his pupils. Every little while the boys by mistake would pitch the ball over the fence into the garden of Loui Meunier, whose home was located on what is now the Commercial House site. Mrs. Meunier was much annoyed by the intrusion and during one of the games picked up the ball and refused to return it. The enraged school master leaped over the fence and proceded to recover his property, Meunier grabbed him by the crown of the head, however, and although Tyler apparently emerged the victor in the victor he lost his wig and came forth from the fray with his head as bald and shining as a billiard ball. Meunier had Tyler arrested for assault and battery, and although the latter obtained in his defence all eloquence of the late Charles M. Webb, then a young attorney, he lost his case as well as his wig.

Worked for Father

Young Lyon attended school until sixteen years of age when he obtained his first employment in his father's shingle and planing mill, located on the present site of the Consolidated mill yard. At the age of twenty-six his father sent him down the river to Boscobel with a lumber raft, which he disposed of for $1,000, and although his father had repeatedly cautioned him to deposit the money in a Boscobel bank, he brought it back safely on his person.

In the year 1883 Mr. Lyon in company with Uriah Hill, George M. Hill, S. N. Whittlesey, John and Martin Conway, Louise La Vigne, and Lucy Sexten left for Falkerton, North Dakota, to take up homestead claims. At the end of three months Mr. Lyon returned to Centralia, and the remainder of the party returned shortly after.

Upon his return from Dakota he went to work at the carpenter trade. Some of the homes and buildings he built included the J. W Natwick home, the Paul Preston home, (now the Congregational Parsonage,) the Frank Garrison home, the Union Church (now the Masonic Hall) and other structures.

Built Lyon Hotel

In the year 1887 he purchased property at the corner of Grand avenue and Third avenue and built the Lyon Hotel, which he successfully operated until 1899. In that year he leased it to Jasper Crotteau, who continued to operate it as a hotel until 1904 when it was remodelled and has since been used for stores and offices.

Mr. Lyon has always been an enthusiastic sportsman, and while operating the hotel he found plenty of time to shoulder his gun and take to the woods for game.

He continued to work at his trade as a carpenter, and was employed as a millwright in the South Centralia pulp mill and in the Jackson Milling company mill. Among other work he undertook the remodelling of the grist mill at Hixton, owned by Congressman William Price, and also built the hotel at Vesper and was millwright for a time in the planing mill of John Daly and Henry Sampson near Babcock.

Organized Land Company

Mr. Lyon organized the Lyon Land Company which has platted and subdivided the old Lyon homestead. The land is all located on the west side of the river, and in recent years has been rapidly build up. The Lyon addition is located on the river bank, and the beauty of its location has made it much sought after by home builders.

On April 9, 1888 Mr. Lyon was married to Miss Anna Williams of Amherst. He has three sisters and three brothers, Mrs. Lydia Houston and Mrs. J. W. Natwick of Wisconsin Rapids, Mrs. Esther Hoover of Nekoosa, Reuben Lyon of Marshfield, Ore., Theron Lyon of St. Marie, Idaho, and Dr. Russell Lyon of Wausau.

Mr. Lyon is a member of the E. F. U. and a supporter of the Methodist church. He was candidate for the office of mayor at the last city election, but was defeated by Mayor O. R. Roenius.

Turkey, driven out of Europe, seems certain to come back, perhaps pretty strongly, considering that the sultan is religious head of the Mohammedan world.

In Russia the overturning has been completest of all.

BADGERS OUT TO SETTLE GRUDGE IN GAME TODAY

CONFIDENT OF HUMBLING ILLINI IN GAME THIS AFTERNOON, BUT TAKING NO CHANCES OF UPSET.

(By Associated Press)

Madison, Wis., Nov. 11—Today opened ideal for the clash on the gridiron of Camp Randall this afternoon between Wisconsin and their old time rival, Illinois, to settle a football argument and also a grudge that has lately developed between the two universities.

It looked as though the fighting elevens would have a dry field and snappy weather for the game to be played before a homecoming crowd of 27,000. The Badgers feel confident of a victory.

Would End Ill Feeling

The alumni hope that the ill feeling developed recently between the two schools, when Illinois protested Murry, regular Wisconsin tackle, will be quieted when one or the other team emerges victorious.

Wisconsin is favored to win the game, even by Illinois, but Coach Richards plans to take no chances. They are out to make four straight victories against Illinois in as many years, and with the Badger machine in better running order than at any time this season, are confident they can down their opponent.

Practically every man on the Wisconsin eleven is in good condition. The varsity backfield, composed of Captain Williams, Taft and Gibson and quarterbacks running close to top form, while the line is free from injuries and ready to meet the Illini attack.

"Buy Here and Save The Difference"

I go where I get good Butter

"A given weight of fat produces more than twice as much heat or energy to the body as the same weight of sugar, starch, or nitrogenous food."

Bulletin No. 22
Ill. State Food Commission.

More and more people realize the need of eating good butter and plenty of it. More and more they judge a restaurant or hotel by the kind of butter it serves. Good food gives "pep" and moral fibre; it helps us to stand the gaff of the daily grind; it makes workers out of weaklings. And all agree that Butter is good food; rich in "calory" supply, giving energy in good measure.

Folks used to eat butter only because it tasted good; now they eat it because it is good. Do you? Do you demand that "extra pat" at every meal—whether at home or away?

Don't stint yourself or the family; don't defraud the youngsters of the "fighting chance" in the fuel-making fat of good butter.

Daisy Pie:
1½ cups rice, ½ cup butter, milk, eggs. Put rice in a double boiler, add butter, season with salt and pepper, and fill the rest of the space with milk. Steam until rice is done and has absorbed all of the milk. Place cooked rice in a baking dish well buttered and break on the top as many eggs as will lie side by side. Season eggs, add a lump of butter, and bake until eggs are coagulated.
When you leave out the Butter and Eggs you leave out the goodness.

There's no such thing as a 'substitute'
for BUTTER AND EGGS

The Standard of Comparison

The Buick They Judge By

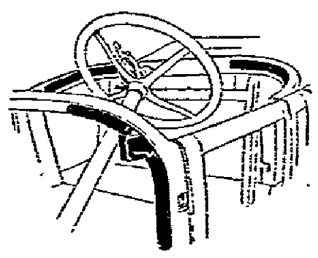
The Model "45" Six Cylinder Touring—$1195

The famous Buick five-passenger, six cylinder open model today, as in past years, sets the standard of automobile value.

It is the motor car by which others are judged because it represents the best of each year's developments in mechanical refinements, appearance and riding comfort.

The Buick Model "45" combines the characteristic Buick qualities of performance and stability with distinctive beauty and a completeness of appointments not to be found elsewhere.

We'll be pleased to give you a demonstration any time.



Better Body Construction

Braces in the body frames of Buick open models are bolted through the wooden frame work instead of being merely screwed into it. Bolting these braces prevents the joints from loosening under driving strains. Note how the bracket for the windshield post is bolted in seven places, making it absolutely rigid. In mounting the bodies on the chassis more bolts are used to secure the body.

The alumni hope that the ill feeling developed recently between the two schools, when Illinois protested Murry, regular Wisconsin tackle, will be quieted when one or the other team emerges victorious.

Wisconsin is favored to win the game, even by Illinois, but Coach Richards plans to take no chances. They are out to make four straight victories against Illinois in as many years, and with the Badger machine in better running order than at any time this season, are confident they can down their opponent.

Practically every man on the Wisconsin eleven is in good condition. The varsity backfield, composed of Captain Williams, Taft and Gibson and quarterbacks running close to top form, while the line is free from injuries and ready to meet the Illini attack.

"Buy Here and Save The Difference"

I go where I get good Butter

"A given weight of fat produces more than twice as much heat or energy to the body as the same weight of sugar, starch, or nitrogenous food."
Bulletin No. 22
Ill. State Food Commission.

More and more people realize the need of eating good butter and plenty of it. More and more they judge a restaurant or hotel by the kind of butter it serves. Good food gives "pep" and moral fibre; it helps us to stand the gaff of the daily grind; it makes workers out of weaklings. And all agree that Butter is good food; rich in "calory" supply, giving energy in good measure.

Folks used to eat butter only because it tasted good; now they eat it because it is good. Do you? Do you demand that "extra pat" at every meal—whether at home or away?

Don't stint yourself or the family; don't defraud the youngsters of the "fighting chance" in the fuel-making fat of good butter.

Daisy Pie:
1½ cups rice, ½ cup butter, milk, eggs. Put rice in a double boiler, add butter, season with salt and pepper, and fill the rest of the space with milk. Steam until rice is done and has absorbed all of the milk. Place cooked rice in a baking dish well buttered and break on the top as many eggs as will lie side by side. Season eggs, add a lump of butter, and bake until eggs are coagulated.
When you leave out the Butter and Eggs you leave out the goodness.

There's no such thing as a 'substitute' for BUTTER AND EGGS

The Buick They Judge By

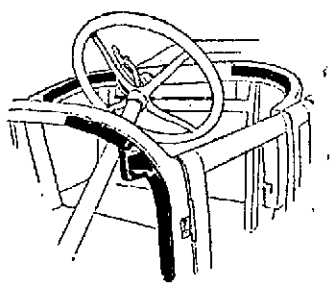
The Model "45" Six Cylinder Touring—$1195

The famous Buick five-passenger, six cylinder open model today, as in past years, sets the standard of automobile value.

It is the motor car by which others are judged because it represents the best of each year's developments in mechanical refinements, appearance and riding comfort.

The Buick Model "45" combines the characteristic Buick qualities of performance and stability with distinctive beauty and a completeness of appointments not to be found elsewhere.

We'll be pleased to give you a demonstration any time.



Better Body Construction

Braces in the body frames of Buick open models are bolted through the wooden frame work instead of being merely screwed into it. Bolting these braces prevents the joints from loosening under driving strains. Note how the bracket for the windshield post is bolted in seven places, making it absolutely rigid. In mounting the bodies on the chassis more bolts are used to secure the body.
